1. Old Courthouse

Associated with some of the nation’s most important Underground Railroad episodes, the Old Courthouse served as Cumberland County’s primary government building from 1846 to 1962.

2. Dickinson College

Reopened under Methodist leadership in 1833, Dickinson College produced some of the era’s leading figures, including a president and Supreme Court chief justice.

3. Historical Society

Residents and soldiers from the Cumberland Valley left a rich collection of letters, documents and artifacts about combat and the home front now available at the Historical Society.

4. Army Barracks

During the 1863 Gettysburg Campaign, Confederate troops occupied parts of the Cumberland Valley and burned down the Army Barracks, which were eventually rebuilt as the Carlisle Indian School.

5. Lincoln Cemetery

Now known as Memorial Park, the former Lincoln Cemetery contains the remains of many local black Union Army veterans, even though most of the headstones have been removed.

6. Bentz House

Noted abolitionist Frederick Douglass spoke in Carlisle in 1872 but the local hotel segregated him from white guests in the dining room, offering a sad reminder of the “unfinished work” of the Civil War era.
