

alacrity unparalleled in history. No sooner did they witness the factitious display of enthusiasm for the war which the Government and its agents had artfully managed to evoke throughout the North than, almost to a man, they began to denounce the South and threaten its people with extermination. It was not that they merely stood by their own section in a war which they saw to be inevitable. Had