

The Daily Freeman. EVENING EDITION.

MONTPELIER, Vt., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1863.

Continuation of the National Congress at Cityburg.

The commission attending the definition of the National Congress at Cityburg, commenced Thursday, the 19th inst.

The line of march was taken up at the principal streets in the City, where the military forces in line and saluted the President.

The President then passed in review the military force, and returned to the City in a carriage, accompanied by the military band.

After the procession of a funeral dirge by the band, an eloquent prayer was delivered by Mr. B. H. Shoups.

Mr. Everett then delivered the address, which was characterized by the perfection of an orator.

He commenced his address with the eloquent words: "I am glad to see you here today."

It was applied by him in allusion to the citizens of this State, who felt that they should be permitted at the public as well as in the most reasonable manner.

He then proceeded to allude to the various causes of the war, and to the various causes of the war, and to the various causes of the war.

He then proceeded to allude to the various causes of the war, and to the various causes of the war, and to the various causes of the war.
